It is conceded by military experts to-day that help by the allies must reach the little nation speedily to be availing. The Serbians claim to be holding their own against the Bulgarians, on the west along the Drina, but it is admitted that the combined German and Austrian drive from the north is making steady progress through the Morava valley.

Field Marshal von Mackensen, from all accounts, realizes the importance of speed to the central powers, as fully as the Serbians appreciated the necessity of delaying the invaders until assistance can reach them from the British, French, Russians, and Italians.

He is hurling his men against the Serbian defenses regardless of losses. These, Nish dispatches said, have been at deast 20,000 killed and 40,000 wounded. Nevertheless the weight of numbers is telling. It is admittedly clear that the invaders will reach Constantinople unless the Serbians are re-enforced.

There are reports that the British recently landed at Saloniza, are pushing to work the declaration of war against Bulgaria makes the British the first of the allied powers to accetpt the German challenge in southeastern Europe and emissions of the serba are beginning to appeal of the serba are beginning to appeal

Roumania's decision to remain neutral appears to have closed that avenue except through the use of force, at which the allies hesitate.

It is agreed that the situation is serious. Some solution of the difficulty is hoped for, however, through an exchange of views between London, Paris, Petrograd, and Rome within the next few hours.

Hazard In Greece.

It is most essential, therefore, that the Austro-Germans be helted in Serbia. The increasingly equivocal attitude of Greece, in fact, makes an expedition into Serbia based on Salonika, one of into Serbia based on Salonika, one of considerable hazard. If the Greeks conclude that Serbia is destined to be dismembered, no agreement with the allies can prevent them altering their policy so as to be in at the death. It would be precarious for the allies if, after they had sent a large force into Serbia, Greece were suddenly to prevent supplies for Serbia being landed on Greek soil. Lither war would have to be declared against Greece, or the isolated army in Serbia would be compelled to surrender after its ammunition had gone.

There have been intimetions suggested in the British rarliament that the Greek situation is not regarded with full satisfaction by the military authorities.

Two Alternatives.

Under this condition, the allies must now be taking under consideration an alternative plan to the Serbian expealternative plan to the Serbian expedition. There are, in fact, two other possible methods of preventing the maintenance of a German line of supplies to Constantinople. One is to isn'd troops on the Aegean const of Bulgaria and the other is to send a force into European Turkey. Either of these expedients, is successful, would serve the main purpose of the western allies as completely as if the German advance were checked in Serbia. The principal requirement of the allies is men and Great British possesses probably 2,000,000 of them trained, but not yet employed. The British declaration of war against Bulgaria seemingly can only mean that the men are to be
